readily to experimental methods without much arithmetic, although some who are well versed in figures find difficulty in grasping the situation according to ordinary rules. It appears that five boys, whom we will designate as A, B, C, D and E, went fishing, and entered into certain agreements regarding the divisions of the spoils, which solve readily in actual practice when distributing the fishes, but looks like a complicated partnership agreement, as each boy has to pool his luck with the one next to him. It appears that A and B caught 14 fish, B and C, 20; C and D, 18; D and E. 12, while A and E each caught just alike. We will now go into the complications of the separate partnerships and ask our puzzlists to tell from the figures given just how many fishes each caught. It is a puzzling problem to solve mathematically, but in actual practice C just pooled his catch with B and D, and each of them took just one-third. Each one does the same, adds his stock to those of his two side partners, and then divides the same into three portions until all five are just alike. Can you guess how many fish each boy caught?

ANSWER TO'MYSTERIOUS CRYPTOGRAM. That puzzling love message which Mrs. Jones left on the pincushion for the enefit of her belated spouse has been translated by our clever puzzlists to say: 'I ate nothing today," as can be seen quite clearly, viz.: I 80 2500 A. The 500, which represents D, was the difficult feature, although it is an old trick
